Mariachi Border in Cochineal

The Uxmal Border combines multiple embroidery stitching techniques with laser cut velvet on a textural linen ground. The pattern is derived from ornamentation found in Mayan architecture. Multi-colors are used both to delineate the pattern and create accents.

“Traveling the world, I am always intrigued by a culture’s handcraft. My passion for artisan textiles inspired the creation of this elegant collection of trims for Samuel & Sons that is simultaneously refined and natural.”

– Laura Kirar

Embroidery, appliqué and hand-covered beads are all techniques used to render the patterns in Artesania X. These patterns were inspired by the global influences from Laura’s travels, her time in Mexico, as well as her deep appreciation for nature which can be seen in this collection’s textures, selection and combinations of materials as well as in the patterning. “There is such grand architecture and scale in the Yucatan, rich history and materials that have withstood the test of time,” she said.

Artesania X trimmings are textural and dimensional, woven from natural materials such as linen, raffia, and wool. In certain patterns, these matte fibers are accented with strands of metallic thread introducing an interesting juxtaposition and a bit of lux.

Torero Beaded Fringe: Oblong, hand-covered tonal beads are suspended from an embroidered header incorporating a rhythmic pattern of triangles depicted in metal yarns.

Torero Embroidered Border in Salt

Uxmal Appliqué Border in Cenote

The collection’s comprehensive colors range from neutrals such as Salt, Metate and Granite to rich earthen tones of Cochineal, Indigo and Nopal.

The Artesania X collection trimmings are tactile and intrigue the senses. The various border patterns and beaded fringe will delineate the lines of upholstered furniture or become the focal point on drapery at the window. Artesania X conveys an aesthetics that reflects Laura’s deep respect for craft, history and its cross section with innovation.
